Knowledge and method

Promotion communicates; place makes the product available where and when customers want it.

- Above-the-line promotion reaches mass audiences through paid media.
- Below-the-line methods target customers more directly, such as email or sales promotion.
- Digital promotion can be targeted and measured.
- Direct distribution sells without an intermediary.
- A channel with intermediaries can expand reach but reduces control and margin.

MINI CASE

GlowSkin is a small online skincare brand aimed at women aged 18-25. It has PKR 300,000 for launch promotion and no physical shops. Influencers offer measurable discount codes; a national billboard costs the full budget.

WORKED CHAIN

Micro-influencers fit the 18-25 target and codes reveal conversions. Therefore GlowSkin can adjust spending and protect its limited budget better than with one billboard.

Knowledge, application and analysis

Use the mini case in Questions 3-6.

Question	Your answer
1. Define promotion.
2. Define direct distribution.
3. Identify one targeted method in the case.
4. Explain one benefit of discount codes.
5. Explain one drawback of online-only place.
6. Recommend a promotional method.

QUALITY CHECK

Circle every case fact. Underline every because link. Box every business impact.

Models and correction log

Wording may differ, but the knowledge and chains must be accurate.

Q	Answer / model points
1	Communication used to inform or persuade customers.
2	Selling from producer directly to customer without an intermediary.
3	Influencer promotion using trackable codes.
4	Codes measure which creator generates sales, so scarce budget can move toward effective channels.
5	Customers cannot test products physically, possibly reducing trust and conversion.
6	Use several relevant micro-influencers, conditional on audience authenticity and cost per conversion; avoid risking the full budget on one billboard.
